Anthony Beasley, is so easy to work with, and he is so considerate. He's also apologetic when he's unable to get something done within the time frame that he originally thought it could be done. He's just been wonderful to work with.

Contractor was an asshole and very unhelpful. Once they realize we weren't going to use them for the work. They just completely stopped responding to us about anything.

Blackmon Mooring sent two guys to come out and look at the shower. They did some measurements and I told them what I wanted. They were supposed to be ordering the shower pan, but it never came in. They then end up firing these two guys and send another crew out. I told the next crew what I wanted and no one wrote anything down. Neither installation group went step by step. They then get the shower pan backwards and have to call a plumber to move my drain 8-inches over. He is jackhammering in the house all day and I have a toddler in here. This is all just to move the drain over because they didn't want to spend the money on getting a new shower pan. I then called the supervisor and ask "When do I need to pick out faucets and fixtures?" and he said I could do it later. He never actually told me that I needed to pick the faucet before I laid the tile. So, we have this faucet that we have to figure out who made it because they already laid the tile around it. We had to play a guessing game and we had to buy three different faucets to figure out which one fits. They didn't finish off the rough edges that they left and it was very shady.

The construction part of Blackmon puts a bad mark on the company. They lacked supervision, and the ability to understand the urgency of moving you back into your home. There were no standards and no supervision. They did not follow the outline of what needed to be done. They had to come out several times to redo what they had already done. They did not have the proper training to complete my project. They never wore name tags or uniforms to identify them with Blackmon. It was not a good experience. I hope they provide more training to their employees and trust them to have high standards, so they may complete a job in the proper way.

If I could give less than one star I would. The people at the warehouse once we picked up our belongings were great. The service leading up to that point was TERRIBLE!!!! It was the worst customer service experience I have ever had in my entire life. They lied to us and felt like the only thing they wanted from us was the insurance check. They put tons of stress on me in my family in a time that was already stressful with the fire. I am a super laid back chill person and always give people the benefit of the doubt, however, in this situation, it was the ABSOLUTE WORSE customer service experience I have ever had. I would NEVER recommend them for ANY services.

They were quick and finished ripping out sheetrock in one day, using a vaccum to catch excess dust. They left driers and a dehumidifier but were here daily to check until it was completely dry.
